Danièle Sorhagen and Phillip LeBel

Danièle Durieux Sorhagen and Phillip G. LeBel were married yesterday at the Green Hill Yacht and Country Club in Quantico, Md. Dara Rip, a World Christianship minister, officiated. Mrs. LeBel, 62, retired last year as a language arts teacher at Memorial Junior High School in Whippany, N.J. She graduated from Kean College and received a master's degree in education from Montclair State College in New Jersey.

She is a daughter of Marcel Durieux of Nant, France, and the late Yvonne Durieux. The bride's father retired as a mechanical engineer in Drancy, France, for the Bendix Corporation, the auto and truck parts maker and former industrial conglomerate.

Mr. LeBel, 63, is a professor of economics in the business school at Montclair State, where he was previously the dean of the business school and the chairman of the department of economics and finance. He also founded the school's Center for Economic Research on Africa. He graduated from Washington College in Chestertown, Md., and received master's and doctoral degrees in economics from Boston University.

He is a son of Ellen G. Bloodsworth of Salisbury, Md., and the late Louis E. LeBel and a stepson of Charles Bloodsworth. The bridegroom's mother retired as a placement counselor with the Maryland Department of Employment Security in Salisbury. His stepfather, also retired, was the sales manager for Delaware and the eastern shores of Maryland and Virginia for the Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Salisbury.

The bride's previous marriage ended in divorce, as did the bridegroom's.
